

NITRO-Oceania

Workshop
3 March 2021

“How organisations best support and encourage research for impact”

Back in December we advised you of this upcoming Zoom workshop exploring inter- or transdisciplinary approaches in the context of planning for impact.

Registrations are now open: <https://www.eventbrite.co.nz/e/nitro-oceania-workshop-planning-for-impact-tickets-141189127481>.

This workshop will provide an opportunity for you:

- to connect with others who are involved in and influence, or have oversight of, the design of research programmes which focus on change “on the ground”
- to learn about designing for impact from a range of perspectives, including funders, researchers, and communities
- to share experiences of success and failure and identify the key elements needed for good outcomes

Speakers and panellists for the workshop are:

- Cassie Kenney, Joint Centre for Disaster Research, Massey University
- Petra Lungren, Innovation Broker, Global Change Institute, University of Queensland
- Teatulohi (Lohi) Matainaho, chairman of the Papua New Guinea (PNG) Science and Technology Council and the Chief Science Advisor to the government of PNG
- Liz Wedderburn, Emeritus International Ambassador for AgResearch Ltd. Formerly Assistant Research Director responsible for International Collaborations, Adoption and Practice Change
- A fifth speaker, yet to be confirmed, who will represent community perspectives

The speakers will pre-record short presentations which you will be able to access prior to the workshop and will join us for a panel discussion on the day. Attendees will then further explore issues and share experiences through breakout groups.

The workshop will be run over two and a half hours, at the following times:
